Becker Engineered Systems Announces Alex Stegeman as Application Engineer

CINCINNATI (July 25, 2022) – Becker Engineered Systems is proud to welcome Alex Stegeman to the team as an application engineer. Stegeman brings over a decade of experience to the position.

As an application engineer, Stegeman will provide customer technical support for products and assist in application design to meet customer needs. He previously worked in various roles for Hydro Systems Company in Cincinnati, assisting with product development, providing technical sales support, and training and onboarding customers and team members to help them better understand the company's solutions.

“At Becker, we're committed to a personalized approach to customer relationships, and we're thrilled to have Alex on the team. His past experience as an application engineer and product specialist have prepared him to best serve our customers. The addition of Alex to our existing team of application experts enables our continued growth to meet our customer's ever-changing needs,” says Greg Tankersley, Becker Engineered Systems president.

Stegeman will work with customers first-hand in product selection and troubleshooting, as well as bring customer needs back to the Becker team for problem solving and engineering. The innovative team at Becker has plenty of products on the shelves, but they're also able to make changes to those products when needed to fit specific customer solutions.

“I'm excited to bring my passion, experience, and drive to an already outstanding Becker Engineered Systems team. I am looking forward to learning from everyone and continuing the world-class service Becker Engineered Systems is known for,” says Stegeman.

Becker is proud to have a wide, satisfied customer base that comes from the decades of industry experience their team holds. The company specializes in chemical feed and equipment design for water treatment applications. For more information, visit beckerengineeredsystems.com.
